

UNPLUGGED IDYLL

Few things are less romantic than checking your crackberry or updating your Tumblr account. Use your honeymoon as an excuse to disconnect. At these six escapes, all blissfully TV, phone and Wi-Fi free, the only connecting you'll be doing is with each other.

📍 Kona Village Resort, Hawaii

The tag line of this oceanfront Big Island hideaway sums up the vibe: Unplugged, Unpretentious, Unmatched. Built on the grounds of a former fishing village along Kahuwai Bay, the resort's 125 traditional Polynesian bungalows come sans TVs, radios, phones and AC — and the Do Not Disturb signs are simply coconut shells. Another unique feature: Alakai Nalu, a team of 20 "ambassadors of the waves" who teach guests ancient ocean traditions like how to paddle an outrigger canoe, Hawaiian style. From $555 per couple, including meals and most activities.

📍 Bamurru Plains, Australia

It doesn't get much more remote (or romantic) than this nature retreat in Australia's safari country, bordering Kakadu National Park and the Mary River flood plain. You won't find TVs, telephones or Internet access here, but there are plenty of other distractions, like spotting crocs and wallaroos on bush treks, airboat rides and open-top safari drives. The nine eco-chic bungalows sit atop timber stilts and sport floor-to-ceiling mesh walls for unobstructed access to the bush's unique sights and sounds. From $920 per couple, including meals and activities.

📍 Little Palm Island Resort & Spa, Florida

Things haven't changed much on this private Keys isle since President Harry S. Truman frequented it in the 1950s and '60s. Accessible only by boat, the luxury resort's 30 thatched-roof suites lack TVs, phones and radios, but they're equipped with sexy amenities like two-person hot tubs, private sun decks and outdoor showers. After your day spent scuba diving, kiteboarding, deep-sea fishing or just chilling by the freshwater lagoon pool, the concierge can set up one of six different romantic turndowns back in your room. From $999.

📍 Blancaneaux Lodge, Belize

The folks who run this spot know the value of a secluded — and disconnected — getaway; before converting the family retreat in Belize's mountainous Cayo District into a resort, the owner — director Francis Ford Coppola — used Blancaneaux as a peaceful place to write. The 20 guest quarters come without TVs or phones and include two honeymoon cabanas with plunge pools and front-and-center views of the Privassion Creek waterfall. For a romantic date, make dinner reservations at the Rice Hut, a private pagoda built beside the river. On another eve, dine at the main restaurant, equipped with a wood-burning pizza oven (Coppola directed The Godfather, after all). From $230.

📍 Tiamo, Bahamas

This dreamy getaway (Tiamo means "I love you" in Italian) is far removed from the bustle of Nassau and Paradise Island, thanks to its secluded locale on South Andros Island, a 60-minute direct flight from Fort Lauderdale via private charter. Tiamo's 10 solar-powered cottages are totally unplugged, and the pool cottages come with honeymoon-approved outdoor hot tubs facing the surf. Onsite Nature Concierges lead snorkel trips to the region's famous blue holes, dive expeditions to the 6,000-foot-deep Tongue of the Ocean, and trail walks in search of rare rock iguanas. From $895 per couple, all-inclusive.

📍 Haramara Retreat, Mexico

Rumor has it Jennifer Aniston likes to head to this hush-hush spot overlooking the sea near Sayulita. Not only is Haramara free of paparazzi, but the 15 palapa-style cabins are also sans electricity — lit entirely by oil lamps and candles. Relieve any lingering postwedding stress with a yoga or meditation class inside one of the open-air pavilions, which have 360-degree views of the Pacific. From $245.
